Lovington Winery, located in the rolling countryside of the Blue Ridge Mountains, is experimenting with densely-planted vines. “Dense planting” stems from the idea that by limiting the number of grape bunches a vine is able to produce, the vine will concentrate all of its energy into fewer bunches, increasing the quality of the grapes. The winery, built into a hillside on the family farm, also employs a gravity-flow production method that virtually eliminates the use of pumps and other mechanization believed to detract from the wines.

Two miles south of Lovington on U.S. Hwy 29. Turn west on Hwy 653 for 1 mile. Vineyard and winery on left at Josie’s Knoll.
